THE CAL TURNER PROGRAM'S FACULTY DISCUSSION SERIES: PROFESSIONS IN GLOBAL PERSPECTIVE

Doing Business in China: Do Americans Profit from Communism?

More and more American companies are producing in and selling to China, some (e.g., G.M., Wal-Mart) of which are making nice profits. China's political stability makes it attractive to American businesses. This political stability, however, results from the government's dictatorship, which disallows any opposition groups, easily squashing demands for unions or environmental controls. Ethically, this raises significant questions for both consumers and business leaders: Does the U.S. profit from China's lack of democracy? Are American companies profiting from communist rule, and if so, should they? This discussion will examine these issues and questions, taking a fairly provocative position regarding American business in China.

Discussion Leader: Ray Friedman, Owen Graduate School of Management
Date: Thursday, April 21, 2005 from 12:10-1:00 pm
Location: Owen, Room 204
