Historical Sketch of the College.

The Medical Department of the University of Nashville and the University of Tennessee was formed by the union of two of the oldest medical schools in the South. The Medical Department of the University of Nashville was organized October 11, 1850. It has graduated nearly five thousand physicians and surgeons. The Medical Department of the University of Tennessee was organized in 1876. It has nearly three thousand alumni. The two medical schools were founded by the same men, the names of Drs. J. Berrien Lindsley, Paul F. Eve, Sr., and W. K. Bowling being prominent in the history of each.

The University of Nashville and the University of Tennessee are and always have been sister institutions. As colleges, they were both established by the State of Tennessee to carry out the purposes of an Act of Congress, which granted to the State two townships of public lands, which were to be sold and the proceeds applied to "the establishment of two colleges, one in East and one in West Tennessee." Thus arose East Tennessee College and Cumberland College, each based on a previous foundation, Blount College and Davidson Academy, respectively. They have both been always undenominational in character. It is fitting that they should be now united in the service of the State and of humanity.

General Statement.

The union of the medical schools of the Universities of Tennessee and of Nashville marks a great forward step in the educational progress of the State. Combining the faculties, the equipments and the buildings of the two schools, and with the financial backing of both universities, the department is now far stronger than either of the component schools separately, and every year will add to its substantial strength and development. It is the avowed purpose of both universities to co-operate to make a medical school of the best modern model. With this object in view, great stress will be laid on the splendid facilities offered in the fundamental scientific branches, as Physics, Chemistry, Anatomy, Physiology, Microscopy, Bacteriology, etc., which will be taught by trained specialists in perfectly equipped laboratories. For the clinical instruction not only has the department the freest access to the public and other hospitals of Nashville, but in its own hospital, containing more than sixty beds, unrivalled advantages are offered the student for that practical bedside instruction that is recognized as absolutely essential at the present time.

The session of the Medical Department opened September 8, 1909, and will close May 2, 1910. More than two hundred students were enrolled.

Requirements for Admission.

An applicant for admission to the Freshman Class must present a certificate from two known reputable physicians, testifying to his moral character and general fitness to enter upon the study of medicine.

A student entering upon the study of a learned profession like that of medicine should have gotten a preliminary literary and scientific training at least equal to that furnished by a standard four-year high school. If he has attended for one or two years at a college of good grade, so much the better.

Hereafter each student applying for matriculation in the Medical Department of the University of Nashville and University of Tennessee must present a proper certificate of preparation from the high school or other preparatory school which he has attended. This certificate must be passed on by the Superintendent of Public Instruction of the State of Tennessee, in accordance with the law of the Association of American Medical Colleges. If he is not a graduate of some literary or scientific institution of good standing, or does not have a proper certificate from some recognized high school, he may present a certificate from the State Superintendent of Public Instruction of Tennessee, or of any other State, showing that he has been regularly examined and has an education equivalent to that of a high school graduate.

The State Superintendent at Nashville holds an examination about November 1st for the benefit of applicants who may not have filed their entrance credentials previously. Such students are allowed to attend lectures until the date of said examination pending the issuance of their medical students' certificate by the Superintendent, but wherever possible, the student is urged to present his credentials on coming to the college.

Laboratory Courses.

The modern conditions surrounding and controlling the practice of scientific medicine make it imperative that much time and energy should be expended by the medical student in the laboratory. The methods of precision in investigating and diagnosing disease, which make scientific medicine of today so incalculably superior to anything the world has known in the past, have necessitated entirely new methods in teaching. The old time lecture has necessarily given place to laboratory instruction. In the first two years of the medical curriculum, the greater part of the student's time must be spent in the laboratories of Histology, Embryology, Chemistry, Physiology, Bacteriology, Pharmacology, Pathology and Anatomy.

This, of course, makes necessary the services of a corps of well-trained laboratory teachers. Herein is the explanation of the increased expense of conducting a modern medical college. It is therefore impossible for the independent medical college dependent solely upon the income from the students to give such instruction as is absolutely essential. These laboratory instructors must spend much time in such teaching, and therefore cannot support themselves by a private practice. Hence such teaching methods are necessarily expensive.

In this school every subject is taught by the practical method, and every lecture course is illustrated and supplemented by either extensive laboratory work or practical clinical teaching.

In the first year, practically the entire time is spent in the study of:

Anatomy, including Histology and Embryology, in which very little time is given to class work outside of the dissecting room and the laboratory;

Chemistry, including general Chemistry, Organic Chemistry and Qualitative Analysis, which is almost entirely laboratory work; and Physiology, which is in a large part taught in the laboratory.

The Histology is covered in the first part of the year and in this the student not only makes use of the microscope and the methods of preparing and examining tissues, but learns practically the structure of all the tissues and organs of the body. This course is immediately followed in the latter part of the year by a practical course in Embryology, in which not only the processes involved in ovulation impregnation and growth of the embryo in relation to uterine tissues are considered, but all the details of the development of the ovum are studied by means of the microscope, and the sequence of events in the development of each tissue and organ are followed by noting the different stages in mounted specimens and sections of the embryo of the pig and the chick.

In this, as in all laboratory courses, a special effort is made to coordinate the details of the study with the practical points in medicine with which they are related. All microscopic laboratory work has two distinct purposes and functions, which must be constantly borne in mind: First, the acquirement of the essential knowledge of the structure and nature of the body, and its pathological changes, upon which an understanding of all the practical phases of medicine depend; second, the training of the hand and the eye in the practical laboratory methods and recognition of the different elements in diseased tissues and fluids of the body, and of the animal and vegetable parasites upon which depends an accurate diagnosis in any given case.

The sequence of the different laboratory courses is so arranged that each one prepares for the laboratory work which follows, as well as for the clinical teaching which is begun in the third year and continued throughout the fourth.

In the third year, an extended laboratory course in Special Pathology is given. In this work the student is required to bring to the laboratory, prepare, examine and report on a number of pathological specimens which he obtains in the Hospital, in the post-mortem room and at the surgical operations.

The course in Pathology is followed in the latter part of the third year by a practical course in Clinical Microscopy, which covers the microscopic and chemical examination of the body fluids and excretions, and from a technical standpoint is the culmination of all the preceding courses. Here the student practically applies his knowledge in Bacteriology as well as Pathology and Chemistry. Particular attention is given to the animal parasites, which in the South are of such great importance as to almost overshadow the bacterial causes of disease.

Frequent written reviews are given, usually as often as once each month, and in addition to the preparation of notes and drawings in all the work done, the final examinations are made very practical by requiring the student to recognize and describe microscopic specimens.

Hospital Instruction.

During the first two years of instruction in the Medical Department the students have no clinical work and do not come into the hospital wards for any form of instruction. All their time is taken up with the fundamental studies and laboratories.

At the beginning of the third year the clinical work commences. The student gets instruction in the Tennessee Free Dispensary, in which were treated in the presence of and with the assistance of junior students, 350 patients the past month, grouped as follows: Gynecology, 14; Genito-urinary Surgery, 53; Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat, 66; General Surgery, 94; Medicine, 123. At the beginning of the fourth year their clinical studies are more thoroughly pursued in the wards of the Tennessee Hospital, which is operated and controlled by the Faculty. The class is divided into sections and these sections are rotated, being at one time in the medical division at another in the surgical, every department being taken in turn. Each student has cases assigned him to study and look after, keeping the proper records.

When the visiting physician makes his rounds the student is examined and quizzed, and each student has the advantage of seeing his own mistakes, as well as hearing the other members of his section examined in exactly the same way. This is of immense advantage to the student. During the school term each Senior is made a resident interne for a period, during which time he eats and sleeps in the hospital and is given the same work as the graduate internes, his work being under the supervision of the visiting staff and graduate internes. While a resident of the hospital, each student must take lessons in the practical administration of anaesthetics. This part of the work is under the supervision of a member of the staff and an expert in that particular line. Also he is required to take a practical hospital laboratory course, including urinalysis and general microscopical work. The hospital is not wide open to students to go and come as they please, but they are under strict supervision, and only those to whom patients are allotted are allowed in the wards.

As the student works in the ward he will acquire an interest in his patients that a student without hospital experience never or rarely obtains. He is drilled daily in the careful observation of the patients under his care, and learns to record the condition from day to day, and in emergency cases often from hour to hour. He could have no better training for his future practice. This is not only good for the student, but the patient receives the benefit, and soon realizes it; instead of objecting to students, he invites them, knowing that the more attention he receives the better and more satisfactory the treatment.

The presence of students brings increased expenses on the administration, but it is a necessary expense, if well-equipped physicians are to be trained. A teaching hospital requires a larger staff of nurses than non-teaching hospitals, but as hospitals as a rule have too few nurses, this, while increasing expenses, works out to the interest of the patient. The nurses, noting the careful attention to detail upon the part of the student, unless she is very stupid, becomes more interested in the patient and in her own work. Hence the teaching hospital, while more expensive than the non-teaching institution, is better for student, nurse, interne and staff.

It is our aim to graduate men who have had experience and observation of the main diseases which they are likely to meet in general practice; for it is general practitioners we desire to turn out, not specialists.

Nashville-Vanderbilt Alumni, 1875-95.

IN 1875 the Faculty of the University of Nashville Medical Department was elected by the Trustees of Vanderbilt University as the Faculty of the "Medical Department University of Nashville and Vanderbilt University." From 1875 to 1895, inclusive, in the matriculation and classification of the student body, there was no distinction until the end of the Senior year, when the diplomas of the respective Universities should be awarded as each graduate should elect. The following graduates of the combined schools were awarded Vanderbilt diplomas, and were not subsequently awarded diplomas from the University of Nashville.

(Addresses in italics are those of the Senior year in college, the present address being unknown.)

A Word to the Alumni.

This number is the first complete Alumni Bulletin ever published by your Alma Mater. The purposes are:

To preserve very valuable data in convenient form for reference;

To enable our Alumni of the various classes to renew old associations;

To increase, if possible, the affection of stalwart sons for their good old mother, whose interest in their welfare never wavers;

And to add to the active mailing list, many postoffice addresses having been lost by removal and other causes.

Notice Senior Year address of any of your classmates in italics Give us the correct address of as many as you know.

Look up your old classmates and write some letters today that will tend to renew the old interest in the college. Let the college benefit by the renewed interest in one another, in it and its future. If you can spend a few weeks this session or next session pursuing post-graduate study here, we shall be more than glad to have you do so. At least send patients that need special treatment to our hospital. They shall receive the best possible attention from our specialists. In the prestige of the latter the college is still most fortunate, as it has always been.

Kindly acknowledge receipt of Bulletin on blank, next page. For future numbers of the Nashville-Tennessee Bulletin, do not hesitate to write us if copies are not received.

E. F. TURNER, Registrar,
631 Second Avenue, South,
Nashville, Tennessee.

N. B.—Alumni acknowledging receipt of this Bulletin will kindly supply in the following spaces the information indicated, thus aiding other graduates to receive their copy of the Bulletin and Prospective Students the June Announcement

The correct addresses of Alumni (*before name indicates deceased, with the year of death after the name).

The young men whose names you will write in second space below are now, or soon will begin, studying medicine. Include only those you can recommend as having sufficient preliminary education, and as gentlemen of good moral character.
