introduction to bill t. jones

emilie m. townes*

i have always been amazed at those who think life should be simple oh, there are simple things about living but life, itself

it's like what my partner says:

life is full of beautiful complications that sometimes makes us say "ow" how we move the air around us either with a look

a wave of the hand

a torque of the foot the longings in glances how we move in history—in time and space

* emilie m. townes introduced Bill T. Jones at the Inaugural Lecture of the Sexuality and Religion Series, held in the James Memorial Chapel, Union Theological Seminary, 4 October 2000.

tells us that life is both simple and complex to come to this place this night to begin this lecture series on sexuality and religion will bear witness to this fact to some in this audience some will remember frank reed’s suicide some will remember ray mesler’s dismissal some will remember closets that were really coffins of the soul and the spirit that were hewn right here at union theological seminary you see, our liberal heritage has never made us immune from small-mindedness and bigotry masquerading as faithfulness or prophecy and even as we celebrate the beginning of this new lecture series we cannot congratulate ourselves too heartily for there are still members of this community who experience the ugliness of hatred for no matter how much we try to dress it up with big words like “heterosexism” or “homophobia” in the end, it is hatred it is movement away from the spirit of hope that fills so many of us in our journeys of faith the very journey so many of us have come here to explore and to grow into perhaps there can be no better person tonight to push along this journey of faith of life filled with complexity and simplicity than bill t. jones as an artist

he has asked of himself and of us to look at the worlds in which we often spin our lives the worlds that shape us even as we shape them his work challenges us to explore whether we believe enough to never give in and never give up on living in the fragments of our lives as we piece ourselves together sometimes despite the odds or what “common sense” might tell us his work challenges us to explore hope and healing and anger and violence not because they are contradictions in living but because both good and evil are part of living and it is through the movement that we often call dance that bill t. jones gives us a glimpse at the realities and the possibilities through his work as a dancer and choreographer jones has been recognized as a genius (the macarthur fellowship) as thoughtful and provocative as a man who cared for his partner, arnie zane, as he lived his life into dying as a man who is willing to show his explorations into faith with thousands jones' work is both awe-ful and beautiful and he shares this with us tonight
