

THE WAGES OF SPRAWL: THE EXPERIENCE OF THE SUBURBAN FORM IN AMERICAN FILM AND FICTION

By

Christian Bradley Long

Dissertation

Submitted to the Faculty of the Graduate School of Vanderbilt University in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of

DOCTOR OF PHILOSOPHY

in

English

December, 2008

Nashville, Tennessee

Approved:

Professor Paul D. Young

Professor Sam Girgus

Professor Cecelia Tichi

Professor Catherine Jurca

Copyright © 2008 by Christian Bradley Long

All Rights Reserved

To Jennifer

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

My parents, Brad and Paula, had faith in me even when I was a college dropout working three jobs. I cannot adequately thank them for their support. Dad, thanks for getting me the job at Northwest Structural in 1994 and pointing me to the job at Cinema 5 in 1992. Love and thanks to the whole family: Megan, Colleen, and Killian, Rachel and Grace, and Dave.

My love of film has a geographical incubator: a multiplex on Route 25 in Carpentersville, Illinois. Thanks to Alan Gilbertson and Patrick Hanson at Cinema 5 (later 12) for hiring me to sell tickets, shovel popcorn, work in the projection booth, and record the weekly answering machine message. Thanks for rehiring me both times. Thanks as well to Cathy Ziaja, for letting me help run advance screenings at the Elk Grove, where industrial history took the form of work prints and booking contracts.

At Illinois State University, thanks to Kirsten Hotelling-Zona, Bob McGlaughlin, Sally Parry, Rodger Tarr, Torri Thompson, and E. Kim Stone. Extra thanks to Bill McBride for his Fourth of July softball games, barbeques, advice, and friendship. Big ups to Luke Mundo, Dan Braun, and Becki Fornelli, with whom I spent many wonderful nights at Lunkers, The Cellar, and my dinky apartment.

At the University of New Hampshire, thanks to Briggs Bailey, E. Jane Bellamy, Monica Chiu, Betty Hageman, Lisa MacFarlane, Tom Newkirk, and especially Doug Lanier. For countless beautifully wasted hours of pro wrestling video games I thank Matt Chase and TJ Moretti.

At Vanderbilt University, I want to thank Natalie Baggett, Sarah Corbitt, Donna Caplan, and Janis May, who show infinite patience with us in the English department. At Vanderbilt I had the tremendous good fortune to work with Thadious Davis, Theresa Goddu, Deak Nabers, Mark Wollaeger, and Dana Nelson, all of whom figured in my improvements as a writer and teacher. Extra special thanks to Jonathan Lamb and Bridget Orr, who not only gave generously of their time to talk shop and politics, but also let me live in their house for a year – such generosity is the norm at Vanderbilt, which made my time in Nashville a joy. I owe a thousand thanks to, among others, the weekly basketball gang of Beau Baca, Matt Duques, Matt Eatough, Josh Epstein, Justin Haynes, John Morrell, and Brian Rejack, as well as less sporty friends like Nicole Seymour, Sarah Kersh, and Ben Graydon. For their insightful critiques of chapter drafts, I owe Jeff Menne, Katherine Fusco, and Amanda Hagood many, many thanks.

Back in the Chicago suburbs, Chris Simich and John Foersterling, whose phone calls, emails, and letters always seem to come at the best moments, have my lifelong gratitude. David Gruber has been an incredible correspondent, confidant, and as good a friend as I have ever known.

The variety of opportunities at Vanderbilt has been instrumental in my survival – both financial and intellectual. It was a pleasure to write web content for Kurt Brobeck and Kim Brazill at Peabody College; to teach technical writing in John Veillette’s PAVE Program in the School of Engineering; to teach gifted high school students in the Vanderbilt Summer Academy and Weekend Academy programs run by Elizabeth Schoenfeld and Jay Watson; to copy edit for Katie Crawford; and to act as a research assistant and film-editor for Bridget Orr and Jonathan Lamb. The Center for the Americas, headed by Vera Kutzinski, afforded a spirited place for my work to develop during my two year fellowship. Penelope Peirce's Learning Resource Center, where I was patiently and repeatedly taught the finer points of Final Cut Pro, was an invaluable resource for not only my research, but also for my teaching.

I owe Sam Girgus, Cecelia Tichi, and Catherine Jurca immense thanks for the time and energy they have so generously given me. Paul Young merits even greater thanks – I remain convinced that he has a time-space wormhole in his office that provides him with 38 hour days – to say that his work as a mentor is superior understates the case.

A somewhat anonymous thank you goes out to Philip Glass and Mike Patton. Glass and Patton projects were the main soundtrack for the composition of this work. Music often came from the kind folks at Grimey's. Fred Koller at Rhino Books pointed me to the industrial film used in this project and feeds my collection of romans noirs.

I made the last revisions to this dissertation in Sumner and Christchurch, New Zealand. The English department in the School of Culture, Literature and Society at the University of Canterbury has shown exceptionally generosity from the moment I touched the south island. Thank you, Philip Armstrong, Gareth Cordery, Patrick Evans, Rachael King, John Newton, Paul Millar, Creon Upton, Mary Wiles, Alan Wright, and Nicholas Wright.

Unfortunately, I lost two friends before I began this project. For Frank Ward and Vincent Giallombardo, I say thank you for letting me be part of your too-brief lives. I miss you both.

My dog Clarence, although I don't think he can read, deserves my thanks. No matter how I feel, as soon as I look at him, I smile.

Thanks and love to Jennifer Clement, who makes everything I do smarter and in every way better. Without her, I would never have come close to writing this. This is for her, with love.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
DEDICATION	iii
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS	iv
LIST OF FIGURES	x
Chapter
I. INTRODUCTION: IN PRAISE OF BABBITTRY. SORT OF: SPATIAL PRACTICES IN SUBURBIA.....	1
The Trouble With All-Consuming Babbitry	2
II. THE SUBURBS! STARRING JACK LEMMON: STAR STUDIES, NORMALCY, AND THE BUILT ENVIRONMENT	30
Jack Lemmon: Star. Everyman. Normal	32
The Apartment: “Be a Mensch”	39
Good Neighbor Sam Bissel in God’s Own Junkyard	46
Save the Tiger from The China Syndrome	59
No Country for Grumpy Old Men: Jack Lemmon gets old for the suburbs.....	66
III. FINDING YOURSELF ON THE WAY: DETOURNEMENT AND THE SUBURBAN TRANSPORTATION INFRASTRUCTURE.....	71
Following the Tire and Train Tracks of The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit.....	76
Same as it Ever Was: The Stepford Wives and Falling In Love	106
IV. “THIS AIN’T SO BAD”: BUILDING THE SUBURBS TO ESCAPE THE SUBURBAN FURROW.....	115
Commuting an affective death sentence	121
“There goes the neighborhood”: Suburban belonging

	and the convenience store	139
	The tar pit of stupidity: Suburbia and the Creative Class	146
	“Here comes the neighborhood”: Gay men, gentrification, and class mobility	151
	“This ain’t so bad”: The false promise of suburban form.....	156
V.	RUNNING OUT OF GAS: ON NOSTALGIA, THE ENERGY CRISIS, AND THE DEAD END OF THE SUBURBAN FORM.....	159
	Back to the Future	161
	Energy Crisis	166
	The Ice Storm and the Energy Crisis	169
	The Ice Storm: The fantastic suburban form	173
	Dutch Elm and the Dis-ease of auto industry suburbia	178
	Who and What bears the brunt of the wages of sprawl?	183
	What Color is Your Apocalypse? The future of the suburbs	189
VI.	“CLEAR A PATH...I’M GOING HOME”: USING THIRDSPACE TO FIX METROPOLITAN REGIONS.....	196
	REFERENCES.....	207

LIST OF FIGURES

Figure 2.1.....	40
Figure 2.2.....	52
Figure 2.3.....	56
Figure 2.4.....	56
Figure 2.5.....	62
Figure 2.6.....	63
Figure 3.1.....	88
Figure 3.2.....	113
Figure 4.1.....	131
Figure 4.2.....	134
Figure 4.3.....	135
Figure 4.4.....	135
Figure 4.5.....	136
Figure 4.6.....	137
Figure 4.7.....	142
Figure 4.8.....	153
Figure 4.9.....	155
Figure 5.1.....	163
Figure 5.2.....	164
Figure 5.3.....	164
Figure 5.4.....	179

Figure 5.5.....181

Figure 5.6.....185

Figure 5.7.....187

Figure 6.1.....197

Figure 6.2.....201

Figure 6.3.....204