Let the season begin

New SEC rules for fans in the stands.

by ERIN PRAH
Editorial Fellow

When the Southeastern Conference released its new policies for fans and members of the media in early August, it was met with so much opposition the SEC was forced to revamp the policies several times. Now in their final versions, what does all that contract jargon actually mean for a fan in the stands?

Charles Bloom, associate commissioner of media relations for the SEC, said the policies have less to do with the medium (i.e. Twitter, Facebook, blogs) and more to do with the message (play-by-play descriptions versus general game day comments).

The only two absolutes for fans, Bloom said, is first, no play-by-play descriptions on any site, and second, no video can be taken of on-the-field game action.

"You can take video of the sideline, or your friends in the stands, video of tailgating," Bloom said, "anything but game action video. You can put it on the Internet and link to it, Twitter, Facebook, however you want to do it."

Fans are, however, allowed to take still photographs of game-time action because the SEC assumes such photographs will be poor quality. Using social media is also allowed as long as the updates are not play-by-plays.

The reason for these new terms and conditions is so the SEC can protect its video and digital rights, the highest priority being game-action video. Last August, the SEC signed a 15-year contract with ESPN and renewed its contract with CBS, allowing the conference to secure the rights to all SEC content, "going backwards as well as going forwards," Bloom said.

Then-junior Daniel Vocelle (center) cheered on the Dores against Auburn last season, a win that pushed Vandy to 5-0. Students sitting in the stands this year won't be able to publish real-time, play-by-play updates as part of the new SEC fan policy.

Nashville rallies for health care reform

Nashvillian Charlie Fanner attended a candlelight vigil for health insurance reform in Centennial Park on Wednesday night. The vigil, organized by Moveon.org political action, stressed an urgent need for health-care reform to help support the growing number of uninsured and underinsured Americans.

Tonight: Exodus from The Commons

by JOSLIN WOODS
Asst News Editor

Tonight freshmen can descend on Greek Row for the first time. And some first-year students have high expectations.

"They (freshmen) are just going to go insane," freshman Curtis Fincher said.

Because of a restriction that prohibited freshmen from attending events where alcohol is present, the Class of 2013 could not attend fraternity parties until tonight, a week later into the school year than last year.

According to Kristin Torrey, the director of Greek Life, the additional week restriction that has excluded freshmen from the fraternity social scene is a result of numerous issues that Vanderbilt had with freshmen at the beginning of last year.

"It is important for the first-year students to focus on getting acclimated to campus and making friends on The Commons before they need to be involved with the social scene in the Greek area," Torrey said. The Sept. 4 restriction was also put into place because the freshman orientation program, CommonVU, extended into the weekend of Aug. 28 and 29.

Although the change in policy was put forth in order to protect freshmen and help them get acquainted with the Vanderbilt community, many freshmen themselves worry that this restriction may do their class more harm than good.

Freshman Tim Patten, for example, said he did not believe the extra week-long restriction is an effective way to prevent the first-year students from drinking.

"The freshmen who want to party have just gone to more extreme and sketchy ways," he said.

Freshman Amanda Kent agreed, noting that freshmen are just

H1N1 won't stop Greek life

by JOSLIN WOODS
Asst News Editor

With the number of H1N1 cases rising on campus, Greek Life will encourage sick students to stay away from events where they would come in close contact with other people, including fraternity parties.

"Vanderbilt University is concerned about keeping our students as healthy as possible. One of the ways we are doing this is by taking precautions to prevent the spread of illness, including the flu, both seasonal and H1N1," said Director of Greek Life Kristin Torrey. "These precautions include reminding students of the importance of personal hygiene and also reminding students if they are sick to stay away from events where they would come in contact with other people."

As of Thursday, the Office of Greek Life had not instituted any new rules or regulations related to Greek social events but had made efforts to educate students on the ways to prevent the spread of H1N1 and other illnesses.

"We provided every Greek resident with the same letter received by students living in the residence halls, along with a small bottle of hand sanitizer. We also plan to install hand-sanitizing stations in Greek houses to help prevent the spread of illness, and we will continue efforts to educate students about ways to avoid getting the flu and spreading it," Torrey said.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the virus commonly known as swine flu is spread the same way as seasonal influenza: through coming in contact with an infected person or touching an infected surface with your hand and then putting your hand near

FLU UPDATE

- Student Health has seen 170 cases of influenza-like illness since Aug. 10, although ILIs potentially could be other infectious diseases, not just the flu.
- The Student Health Center will offer a flu clinic from 3-6 p.m. on Sunday to treat students who get sick over the weekend.
- Vanderbilt has had confirmation for cases of both seasonal flu and H1N1, commonly referred to as swine flu.
- The University of Nebraska-Omaha has what is believed to be the first college death this school year related to H1N1.
- The Southeast is experiencing the highest levels of ILIs, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the American College Health Association.

PROFESSOR SPOTLIGHT

Kendal Broadie
Undergraduate biology, cell and developmental biology and pharmacology at the medical school
7 years at Vanderbilt

SUBMITTED BY KENDAL BROADIE

Professor Kendal Broadie researched how connections happen in embryos and between nerve cells as part of his doctoral research.

- 1. What classes do you teach?
Biological Sciences 110A: Intro to Biological Sciences and Biological Sciences 256: Molecular Neurobiology
- 2. What do you like to do in your free time?
I am a contra dance teacher and caller. We have dances every Friday night. There's a great Web site for anyone interested in attending: www.nashvillecountrydancers.org.
- 3. Where did you go to school?
I did most of my undergraduate work at University of Oregon and went to graduate school at the University of Cambridge in England.
- 4. What are your academic interests for research now?
I'm a neuroscientist and a geneticist. My lab focuses on how genes work in the nervous system and how connections work between nerve cells. We also make models of genetic diseases of the nervous system to study diseases inherited in families. We are doing a lot of work with Fragile X syndrome, a common inherited mental-retardation disease.
- 5. If you were stranded on a deserted island, what three things would you bring with you?
A musical instrument (I'm not very good, so I'd have plenty of time to practice), a fishing net so that I would not starve to death and my wife.
- 6. What was your first job?
Working on an Alaskan fishing fleet
- 7. If you could have dinner with anyone, dead or alive, who would it be?
Leonardo DiVinci to see if he's all he's cracked up to be.
- 8. What advice would you give students to make the most of their four years at Vanderbilt?
Get involved beyond your classes. I became disillusioned with solely taking classes in college, and getting involved in research made the experience totally different. It gives you more insight into what professors are really doing.
- 9. What's something that your students don't know about you?
When I was a teenager, I walked across North America from coast to coast. I was a hippie and originally planned to do it as part of a peace march from L.A. to D.C., but when we got to Death Valley, the organizer disappeared with all of the money. After much contemplation, my friend and I decided to do the walk ourselves. It took nine months. I didn't miss school because I dropped out when I was 14 and started taking university classes. I was in and out of university for nine years and finished by age 23.
- 10. What's the biggest challenge you've faced in your research career?
Research is a daily challenge. In my opinion, it's the hardest thing a person can do because you're doing something no one else has ever done before. It's also very hard to get funding.
- 11. Who are your heroes in life?
I don't have any specific people as heroes, but rather a type of person — anybody who tries to live life to the fullest. So many people only take; anyone who gives in any way is a hero to me.

your nose or mouth. Alcohol doesn't facilitate the spreading of the virus, but sharing drinks does, said Dr. Louise Hanson, the medical director of student health services, so in that way, fraternity parties pose a threat to the spread of the virus.

The difficult part about preventing the spread of an infectious disease like H1N1 or influenza in general is that most people are infectious about 24 hours before they know they're sick, Hanson said.

"It's hard for students not to have contact with each other, especially in event situations," she said. "Where you can avoid it and want to avoid it would be not drinking after somebody, not sharing food, not sharing personal care items, washing hands — all the things I think young adults, adolescents and children don't really think about."

Although fraternity parties could potentially be an event where H1N1 and other illnesses are spread, students are not too nervous about attending Greek social events, nor are they planning on changing their social habits.

Sophomore Nate Engstrom said he believes he got sick from attending a party last weekend, but doesn't plan on making many changes to his social habits.

"I don't think that's a reason to stop going to parties," Engstrom said, but added, "I might bring a little bottle of Purell."

Senior Luis Vallejo similarly said he is not worried about attending fraternity parties while H1N1 is a worry around campus.

"As long as people keep their own cups and don't make out with random people, then I think we're OK," he said.

Vallejo also said he hopes that students will self-quarantine themselves if they have come down with the flu or any other ailment.

"I kind of assume anyone with the flu virus would be out of commission and not going out," he said.

Sophomore Danielle Krauthamer said she is more worried about catching H1N1 from interactions in the dorm and in class than she is from going out on the weekend.

"I don't really share cups with other people," she said, "so it's not really going to affect whether or not I go out on the weekends."

While many students are not worried about the spread of H1N1 at Greek parties, Torrey said she believes Greek leadership will take this issue very seriously.

"It will be important that they promote good hygiene at social functions and dissuade sick members from attending functions," she said. "We will follow the advice of Student Health and other university officials, who are closely monitoring the situation and are in contact with federal and state health officials."

Like many students, Krauthamer said the only lifestyle changes she has made are to use Purell frequently and wash her hands whenever she can.

"I'm not going to stop having fun because of swine flu," she said. ■

SEC RULES: Policy change protects network

With these contracts in place, the SEC created its own digital network, working with XOS Communications, to provide vaults of content for each of the schools in the conference. The SEC Digital Network will house digitized video footage from ESPN, as well as provide game day highlights for each team, available to fans and media alike.

Director of Media Relations at the Vanderbilt Athletic Department Rodney Williamson likened college football images and videos to products of the music industry to explain why the SEC would worry about these valuable images being free in the public domain.

"This (policy) is probably the natural order," Williamson said. "It's just taken a long time to get here. College athletics has just gotten to be a pretty big business and to a lot of people that's regrettable. It's not as simple as it once seemed to be, but we're trying very hard to keep things in the proper perspective here at Vanderbilt."

Bloom said the initial fan policy was very wide in scope and the SEC never intended to write a policy that said fans couldn't Tweet or Facebook from the stadium. Those misunderstandings prompted the rewrite.

"We always encourage our fans to let people know all the good things that are happening in our league," Bloom said.

So what happens if a fan has the newest iPhone and takes some video of Larry Smith throwing a pass down field and posts it to her blog?

The SEC's technology partner, XOS Communications, will be combing through key sites on the Internet looking for rule-breakers, though, Bloom said, there are no repercussions other than XOS just taking down the video. ■

GREEK LIFE: Chapters commit to best interests of community

drinking in their rooms and getting sick. "Wouldn't they rather have students partying on campus than in a random club downtown?" she said.

Some freshmen foresee tonight as being a problematic night for the students who will make their first trip to Greek Row.

"I think it will backfire because the first night everyone is so eager," Fincher said.

Freshman Michael Thomas said tonight there will be a mass exodus from The Commons.

"By setting a date, the night has become an event in the minds of freshmen," he said. "I think it will be worse off than if we were able to go at will."

Although some freshmen are complaining about the Greek policy change, Torrey said infractions in the first two weeks of school have been very scarce, especially compared to prior years.

"We are investigating some allegations related to first-year students at Greek events where alcohol was present, but these seem to be very limited," she said.

According to Torrey, minimal infractions have existed because chapter presidents and council officers have committed to each other that they would stay true to this expectation because it is in the best interest of the community, she said.

According to the Interfraternity Council Recruitment Task Force (Delta Force) last year, if freshmen attended Greek events with alcohol during the orientation period, a fraternity found in violation would face a $5,000 fine and social probation. ■

Flu season takes off; Student Health up to 170 flu-like cases

by SARA GAST

News Editor

Flu season is in full swing on campus — over a month earlier than normal.

As of Thursday morning, the Student Health Center has seen 170 cases of influenza-like illness since Aug. 10, said Dr. Louise Hanson, the medical director of student health services. Student Health sent an e-mail Wednesday informing students of a flu clinic this Sunday from 3-6 p.m. that was established "in response to an increased patient demand" so students who get sick over the weekend don't have to wait until Monday to be seen.

The number of ILIs has tripled in a week, although Hanson said the uptick in cases is not unusual considering the seasonal flu season got off to an early start and is overlapping with H1N1, the derivative of influenza A commonly referred to as swine flu.

Seasonal and H1N1 influenza cause similar symptoms and are clinically no different, Hanson said, with most infected people recovering within a few days. Those who are more susceptible to complications are people who already know they are high-risk. Students with asthma and diabetes may face possible complications from the flu, for example.

Hanson said the number of ILIs could potentially be capturing any number of infectious diseases that present flu-like symptoms, including bad colds or undiagnosed cases of mono and strep throat, and therefore may be unrepresentative of what is happening in the community. Students also may not go to Student Health when they get sick.

Although the numbers of flu-like cases have increased, Hanson said it's hard to know the projection of the path the viruses will take.

"Only time will tell if this will spike and settle down quickly or whether flu season will continue at moderate levels through the whole fall and

As of Thursday morning, the Student Health Center has seen 170 cases of influenza-like illness since Aug. 10.

—Dr. Louise Hanson, medical director of student health services winter," Hanson wrote in an e-mail.

Beth Fortune, the vice chancellor for public affairs, has said repeatedly that the university is paying attention, citing among other actions the hand sanitizer added in dorms, classroom buildings and popular gathering spots like Sarratt Student Center and The Commons Center.

"The chancellor and senior leadership team have been fully briefed on the university's plans and are closely monitoring the situation," Fortune said last week.

Many professors reiterated to their students the importance of taking care of themselves if they have flu-like symptoms and staying away from the classroom. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention ask that people with a flu-like illness stay home for at least 24 hours after their fever has gone to help limit the spread of the virus to others.

During the week, students received e-mails from their schools asking them to e-mail their professors if they are going to miss class due to a flu-like illness and also send a copy to their respective dean. Student Health also sent an e-mail to students asking them to call and schedule an appointment if they are ill and giving them advice on preventing the spread of the virus.

Other universities have been hit hard by H1N1, with the University of Nebraska-Omaha recording what is believed to be the first college death this school year related to the virus. The student also had muscular dystrophy, Fox News reported, which made her highly susceptible to complications.

Mississippi State University was up to nearly 400 probable cases of H1N1 as of Thursday, the university's flu watch Web site reported, and the University of Tennessee had about 100 cases by late last week according to The Associated Press.

The CDC's region IV, which includes the Southeast, was the only region in the most recent CDC Flu View report that was experiencing elevated numbers of outpatient ILIs, while the rest of the nation reported normal levels. The American College Health Association's influenza surveillance recorded the same activity, with region IV having 858 cumulative college ILI cases as of the week of Aug. 22. The next closest region was region X, with 236 cases throughout Idaho, Oregon, Washington and Alaska. ■

COLUMN

Immunize the freshmen: First fraternal exposure

KATHERINE DES PREZ

Columnist

So this weekend is the weekend. As of 10 p.m. this Friday evening, the frats will officially be open for business to the newest members of Vandyland. The houses won't be the only place that Natty flows. This weekend is also the first home football game, thus the first opportunity for tailgating. As we all know, this will cause the number of Solo cups on campus to grow exponentially. Before delving into the ins and outs of this momentous occasion, I would like to establish a few things. First, I will refer to our new Commoners as "freshmen."

"First-year students" just isn't going to happen. Secondly, I firmly believe in the importance of fraternities to our university's way of life. Whether you love them or hate them, nothing spells Vanderbilt better than two or three well-selected Greek letters.

This year, Vanderbilt's policy of no first-week partying for the freshmen has been unusually strict. It's just one more reminder that this institution of higher learning is cracking down on all things unbecoming of Ivy League emulation. Instead of allowing the freshmen to get a little partying (maybe more than a little) out of their systems over the course of a few days before classes start, Vandy has deemed it appropriate to release them onto Greek Row in one fell swoop at the end of the first week of classes, when some unhealthy stress coping mechanisms might be in order. This decision is putting the health of our community at serious risk.

Amidst constant reminders of H1N1 (sanitize, everyone), how can we forget the importance of developing immunity? Our freshmen need to have a little bit of fraternal exposure before the school year starts so their bodies aren't overwhelmed by the intense fratness this weekend will entail. The CDC's Web site says that when the body is exposed to a foreign agent, such as a weakened form of a virus, or, for our purposes, a Vineyard Vines-clad brother, it produces antibodies so that it can swiftly respond to subsequent contact with similar agents. Since the freshmen haven't had the opportunity to develop fraternal immunity, they may soon be receiving e-mails alerting them to stay home if they have developed any unusual symptoms, such as high instances of unnecessarily abbreviating words or inexplicably wearing polo shirts in colors that seriously flatter no one.

Fraternal exposure without adequate preparation can cause more than just odd behavioral symptoms, though. It can have serious physical effects, hangovers aside. Things like popped collars with Ralph Lauren emblazoned across them have been known to cause nausea and vomiting when one's body has not been properly de-sensitized. That's why it is necessary not only to experience initial fraternal exposure, but also to get periodic doses in order to prevent future symptoms — a booster shot, whether weekly or once a semester, depending on your individual needs. If we want our freshmen to be fully functioning members of this community, they're going to need a little frat in their systems.

Last.fm kicks Pandora in the Box
BY ZAC HUNTER

Use Pandora.com? The online radio station that chooses your music based on previous plays and what it thinks you're in the mood for (it is usually right) has just been one-upped. Last.fm is the sophisticated, more awesome, mind-blowing version of Pandora. And I just joined tonight. On last.fm no only do you get the DJ capabilities of Pandora, but so, so much more. With the "Scrobbler" last.fm will track your iTunes track plays and sync it with your online library. In essence, you can use iTunes just as you normally would, but when you are looking for something new just log on to your last.fm account and it will have suggestions ready and waiting. The scrobbler will also give you a brief history of the artist while you listen.

From grain to glass: A tour of the Old Jameson Distillery
BY MIKE WARREN

A large number of us hit up a tour of the Old Jameson Distillery yesterday. Located in Dublin, it's where Jameson first produced its best-selling Irish whiskey. The functioning distillery is in Cork today, but that didn't mean the tour at the old place wasn't worth the €10 fee. Our tour guide Niall led us through each stage of production of Jameson Whiskey as we moved through the museum. He was really informed and pretty aware of the fact that the distillery tour is actually just an advertisement and a chance to drink some whiskey. He was also really accommodating to our large American group, and he could even speak German, French and Portuguese.

Coal ash poses threat
BY THOMAS SHATTUCK

When most people think of a coal power plant, pollution comes to mind. Most people, however, think of carbon dioxide and other harmful gases. There's another side to the equation: solid waste. Some of it is left over residue from the furnace, while the rest is small particulate matter and remains from the cleaning process. Unsurprisingly, the solid material has to be disposed of in some manner. For the King Fossil Plant, operated by the Tennessee Valley Authority, remnants of an ash spill are being transported over state lines to the Arrowhead Landfill in Perry County (North Alabama).

Hazing more 'Common' than you think

RYAN SULLIVAN

Opinion Editor

Hazing is a serious issue on this campus. Don't worry, I'm not talking about making pledges do your laundry or forcing your little brother to polish off a fifth after eating a carton of raw eggs. I'm talking about The Commons.

Tonight, hundreds of freshmen will descend upon frat row for (presumably) the first time. It is initiation night. For the past two weeks, these "first-years" (think "new members" instead of "pledges") have been locked up, unable to become tainted by campus nightlife. During their pledge process, the freshmen were molded by VUceptors (think pledge masters) into the latest and greatest class ever to grace Vanderbilt with its presence. They have been servants to Vanderbilt's larger goal of a school free from the evils of Greek life. Ironically, the service they have performed is undoubtedly the most widespread and obtrusive form of hazing in school history.

Maybe I am taking this metaphor a little too far. I admit, it sounds like a stretch. Humor me. Take a look at some of the examples of hazing listed on the Greek Life Web site:

Conducting any type of "hell week" activities

While all of their friends were at state schools, freshmen were forced to stay on The Commons and refrain from raging. They waited their whole lives for college and then can't party for their first week here? Sounds like a hell week to me.

Marking or branding

I went to Target to pick up some last minute dorm room supplies during move-in. I got there and suddenly, I was surrounded by freshmen with stickers with their house names on them. Not only that, but their parents had them, too. Later in the week, they all were wearing matching T-shirts once again boldly displaying their house names. Definitely worse than having to wear polos to class. Luckily for the freshmen, this pledge task was short lived. They are no longer forced to be explicitly marked. But they are definitely still branded. If you can't spot the freshmen on campus, then you must be a freshman.

Requiring new members to practice periods of silence

Quiet hours on Commons are from 8 p.m. to 8 a.m. during the week and from midnight to 9 a.m. on weekends. If you lived in Branscomb freshman year, you couldn't expect it to be quiet before 1 a.m. on Thursdays. In comparison, Commons quiet hours seem a bit out of hand.

Scavenger or treasure hunts

During VUlympics, freshmen had to do — get this — a scavenger hunt. They had to count the number of trees between the Student Life Center and Kissam, and locate buildings all over campus. We all know how dangerous a scavenger hunt can be. For shame, Vanderbilt.

Requiring calisthenics such as sit-ups, push-ups, etc.

I distinctly remember walking by Alumni Lawn and seeing freshmen (dressed in ridiculous attire, which, by the way is another court of hazing) doing all sorts of crazy exercises. For some kids, volleyball or kickball can be extremely physically exhausting. Greek Life told me if I thought it might be hazing, it probably is. I guess we can add this one to the list.

If this isn't exhaustive enough for you, then OJ didn't do it. I'm reporting the case to the hazing hotline.

So, welcome to the fraternity, freshmen. You earned it.

OPINION POLICY

The Vanderbilt Hustler opinion page aims to stimulate discussion in the Vanderbilt community. In that spirit, columnists, guest columnists and authors of letters to the editor are expected to provide logical argument to back their views. Unreasonable arguments, arguments in bad faith or arguments in vain between columnists have no place in The Hustler and will not be published. The Hustler welcomes reader viewpoints and offers three methods of expression: letters to the editor, guest columns and feedback on InsideVandy.com.

Letters must be submitted either in person by the author to the Hustler office or via e-mail to opinion@insidevandy.com. Letters via e-mail must come from a Vanderbilt e-mail address where the identity of the sender is clear. With rare exception, all letters must be received by 1 p.m. on Tuesday, Thursday or Sunday. The editor reserves the right to edit and condense submissions for length as well as clarity.

Lengthy letters that focus on an issue affecting students might be considered for a guest column at the editor's discretion.

All submissions become the property of The Hustler and must conform to the legal standards of Vanderbilt Student Communications, of which The Hustler is a division.

Universal health care is the only option

To the Editor:

I just have a few questions for those who have already been swept up in their loyalties to insurance companies over the interests of the American people.

What makes one person deserve health care over another?

Most of us will lead comfortable lives in which we have health insurance so you may not be concerned. But consider this: 62 percent of all bankruptcies filed in 2007 were linked to medical expenses. Of those who filed for bankruptcy, nearly 80 percent had health insurance. A for-profit health care system will forever encourage insurance companies to skim profits without providing any coverage people need.

Some of you are probably paranoid about getting the swine flu. You don't want to get sick and have to miss class or whatnot. And that fear is likely without a full-time job, dependants or lack of health insurance. Consider the roughly 50 million Americans who live in fear, not because they are germaphobes taking 18 hours but because they are uninsured, many working 40, 60 or 80 hours a week. They know if they get sick and have to miss work, everything can come crashing down. Millions more are underinsured, one catastrophic illness away from home foreclosure due to unaffordable medical costs. It happens to 1.5 million families every year.

Why do we spend more per capita on health care than any other country in the world, yet have a health care system ranked 37th in the world by the World Health Organization? Yes, we have great top-end care. But, our health care system is plagued by tremendous inefficiencies related to our health insurance problem. Emergency rooms have become the alternative to primary care physicians. This is both more expensive and less effective than primary care because people wait to seek treatment until the problem is more severe. We already spend more than any other nation; let's get our money's worth.

Why not a government option?

We already have Medicare, Medicaid and health coverage for our veterans and politicians. Outside of those programs, only the uber-rich do not have to worry about their health care coverage. Insurance companies have demonstrated time and time again where they stand. They favor profits over people's lives. It is time we change that. It is time that the people who benefit from health care expenditures are the sick rather than the shareholders of insurance companies.

Frannie Boyle asserts our health care system will not be able to care for everyone if they were to get coverage. I'm no economist, but it's obvious that if the demand for medical practitioners goes up, the supply will respond. She refers to "getting served (with health care)" as a "privilege." Again, we differ. See, I tend to think a human being should be cared for if they are ill and healed if they are injured. Radical, I know. She wrote, "the government would get to choose who gets care and who doesn't." Private insurance companies have been doing that for years. Only, the government plan answers to the people and is designed to break even rather than make billions. She wrote that "now is not the time" and we should wait to weigh the options. Sorry, but the balance has been tipped towards the insurance industry for a while now. I think we know what option we need. We don't have time to wait.

Go away, Meghan McCain

KATHERINE MILLER
Columnist

Meghan McCain must go.

In a stunning triumph over the impossible, she is neither funny nor smart.

The extent of her political comprehension rests on anecdotal experience and a set of sensory observations about the social mores of Generation Y, rather than intellectual argument. Her writing demonstrates no familiarity or immersion with the actual exchange of political ideas, even theoretical contemporaries like Megan McArdle, Matthew Yglesias or Conor Friedersdorf. Worse still, beyond a mere distaste for logical argument, she lacks intellectual imagination. She perpetually exists in a state of self-victimhood, perceiving every slight against her as an attack on the beliefs of political moderates.

In short, she is the self-proclaimed die-hard Yankee fan who recites each and every player's batting average, but cannot explain the infield fly rule.

And yet, here we are, with Meghan McCain as the media standard bearer for young Republicans.

Monday, she wrote about Ted Kennedy's death and the loss of civil discourse in politics. "I was shocked that even in death, people were having partisan quarrels about his legacy," she wrote, "apparently I can only respect a politician who had served nearly five decades in the Senate if he was a Republican?"

No, of course, not. Compassion dictates otherwise, particularly for political icons.

And yes, of course, Teddy Kennedy achieved a dazzling second act in politics, restoring credibility to his own name, and his own purpose late in life. His complex personal legacy belies an equally vexing political one. Kennedy's old school liberal policies endured until the end, though the back of his baseball card offers an intriguing fondness for deregulation, particularly in the airline industry, and a willingness to compromise on immigration and education.

When partisan figures die, however, our culture tells us to mourn the man, not the politics. If we consider lovely eulogy given by Ted Kennedy Jr., Kennedy's character offered a stark contrast in light and dark. The resolute father who refused to let his son give up was also the man who left a woman to die and perhaps abetted a rape.

McCain alludes to none of these complexities. The basis of her argument for civil discourse rests on a birthday party the Kennedys threw for her brother. This is her lot in life — to tell us stories.

Rather than argue our de-gendered conceptions of professional roles as the basis for gay marriage or provide economic basics for why the public option will fail, McCain just uses a seriously limited pop culture lexicon to tell stories about herself. Leave us alone, Meghan McCain.

Vandy to jumpstart season against Catamounts

by NICK GALLO
Sports Reporter

Coming off one of Vanderbilt's best football seasons in its history, with a 7-6 record and a bowl victory over Boston College, the Commodores are once again prepared to set out on a new campaign. The team had the most wins since 1982 and started the season 5-0, which garnered them a top-25 ranking. That record unraveled down the stretch, but Commodores did just enough to make and win the Music City Bowl in Nashville. This year, the team wants to build on that success created last season.

"We want to improve. I think our guys want to prove that last year was not a fluke, they want to get better," said Vanderbilt coach Bobby Johnson. "They are not satisfied with just barely eking out a winning record, they want to do better. The first goal is to win the first game, and that's all we're thinking about right now."

A big story for this Commodore team is that coach Johnson and his staff have opted to start redshirt sophomore quarterback Larry Smith, who started the bowl win against Boston College last year, instead of redshirt senior Mackenzi Adams. Smith has a cannon of an arm and the Prattville, Ala., native is taking a professional approach to the season.

"I'm feeling pretty confident right now, just taking it one game at a time and right now focusing on Western Carolina," Smith said. "The bowl win was last year, we aren't worried about that anymore. We're just focused on this season right now."

The Commodores are suffering from some unfortunate injuries this offseason, namely to redshirt senior defensive end Steven Stone and redshirt senior running back Jared Hawkins. One bright spot, however, is the return of redshirt senior defensive end Broderick Stewart, who was injured at the end of last season and will be counted upon to be one of the cogs for this defense. Stewart is incredibly excited to get back on the playing field.

"Words can't really express it," Stewart said. "It's my last year, I plan on doing big things. Really, sitting out those two games, it really made me

Vanderbilt vs. Western Carolina

Saturday, Sept. 5
Kickoff is at 6:30 p.m. CDT
TV: CSS

The Commodores are looking for their third consecutive season-opening victory when they host the Catamounts of the Southern Conference.

The athletic department is encouraging the student section to wear gold.

appreciate the game more. I think coming back I'll definitely be playing with a renewed sense of emotion and vigor."

Western Carolina is coming off a 3-9 campaign last season, with its only wins against the small schools Shorter, Presbyterian and Chattanooga. Johnson, however, is familiar with the Catamounts and the Southern Conference after coaching Furman University for eight years before coming to Vanderbilt. Therefore, the Catamounts' struggle last season, when they lost 69-0 to Florida State, means little to Johnson who has great respect from that conference's teams.

"I don't look at them as a non-SEC team or an SEC team," he said. "I've seen a lot of Southern Conference teams whip teams that are supposed to be better than them. We are concentrating on playing our best people for as long as we have to play them, as hard as we can play them, as well as we can play them."

The Commodores will also show respect for the Catamounts in a different light, as Western Carolina tragically lost one of its players this offseason during a workout. Ja'Quayvin Smalls, a junior defensive back, collapsed during a sprint exercise on July 9. As the Catamounts attempt to focus on the game and honor their fallen teammate, the Commodores will also be focusing on starting the new season off the correct way, with a victory. ■

CHRIS PHARE/The Vanderbilt Hustler

Vanderbilt head coach Bobby Johnson knows Western Carolina from his coaching days at Furman and says it would be foolish to overlook them. His Commodores open the season Saturday at 6:30 p.m. when the Catamounts visit Vanderbilt Stadium.

No-huddle to make its debut

by DAN RYAN
Sports Reporter

What is one to do after leading a football program mired in mediocrity for much of the latter half of the 20th century out of the dark and musty cellar of the school's first bowl win in 50 years?

Why, completely overhaul the offense of course.

Bobby Johnson and company spent much of the spring and fall practice sessions installing a no-huddle version of the spread offense at Vanderbilt. The new offense features primarily three and four wide receiver sets, often times with a tight end as a down lineman or split out into the slot receiver position. The up-tempo scheme is designed to keep opposing defenders on the field longer than they are accustomed, effectively wearing them down over the course of the game.

"The biggest thing when it comes to hurry up offense is that you dictate to the defense, you don't let them get set and make certain calls ... the faster we go, the less they can do," said redshirt senior center Bradley Vierling.

The running game will also feature changes as a pair of freshmen running backs, notably Zac Stacy and Warren Norman have cracked the two-deep in their first year on campus, as they are listed as co-backups to senior Jared Hawkins, who is still nursing a foot injury from last season.

The off-season also included an increased emphasis on conditioning to accommodate not only the new offensive mentality but the team's 12 consecutive games without a bye.

"If we weren't in good condition we'd be out here (at practice) throwing up and passing out and whatnot," Vierling said. "We've been really good this offseason getting out here and getting ready for the 12-week season."

If practice serves as any indication of how the new and improved Vanderbilt offense might look come Saturday, the early returns are good.

"This is the most offensive production we've had in any camp since I've been here, the best scrimmages we've had, the most points," Vierling said. "You can really tell the difference. This team is in really good condition. We're moving the ball really well."

And they must move the ball if the Commodores want any chance at building upon their successes from a year ago.

The Commodores don't exactly have much to lose by switching schemes after finishing a paltry 112th among FBS schools in total offense a season ago, which makes the team's seven wins that much more impressive. Johnson has tabbed redshirt sophomore Larry Smith to lead his new offense, after Smith's impressive start in the team's biggest win in well, probably ever.

"I'm feeling pretty confident right now," Smith said. "We've got our timing down with our receivers. Everything's coming together right now, the backfield, the whole line, hopefully we'll go out and do our thing on Saturday."

It is Smith's confidence, along with his calm demeanor and live arm that led Johnson to chose Smith over redshirt senior Mackenzi Adams as the starter for Saturday's season opener against Western Carolina. ■

Runners ready to go

FRANCIS SIMPSON / The Vanderbilt Hustler

The men's and women's Vanderbilt cross country teams practice at the Rec Center track. Both squads start their seasons Friday afternoon at Percy Warner Park in the Belmont-VU opener.

by MEGHAN ROSE
Asst Sports Editor

Returning this fall with new, dynamic team chemistries, the men's and women's cross country teams begin their season at the Belmont-VU Opener Friday afternoon. The race, held at Percy Priest Park in Nashville, will feature a 4K women's course and a 5K men's course.

"The great thing about the first race of the year is that it truly is the first race of the year," said coach Steve Keith, in his fourth season coaching the Commodores. "Our runners will be running shorter distances than normal races, and we'll have the opportunity to get feedback from them."

Led by Rita Jorgensen, the women's team captured a first place team finish in last season's opener with an average team time of 14:55.29, while the men finished a strong third. Jorgensen paced the Commodores in all races last fall, finishing first amongst the field at both the Belmont-VU Opener and the Commodore Classic.

With a junior-laden women's squad, look for other juniors, including Krisabel Doebel-Hickok and Adrienne DiRaddo, to step up alongside Jorgensen to lead Vanderbilt this fall. With a strong upperclassmen base, the Commodores are excited for the season opener, as well as the remaining cross country schedule, culminating with the Southeastern Conference and NCAA Championships in November.

"We've been building since I got here my freshman year — now the majority of runners are juniors and sophomores, so it seems like this year we are really going to make an impact," Jorgensen said. "Everyone came back really healthy and strong, so our team is looking pretty dynamic."

will pace a squad of 10, boasting four new freshman faces.

Davis was the first Commodore finisher in last fall's Belmont-VU opener, turning in a ninth-place finish in the race with a time of 15:45.68. While Davis is concentrating on finishing his cross country career at Vanderbilt on a high note, he is focused on helping the underclassmen transition fluently to collegiate racing.

"I'm much more focused on the team, but I want my own personal successes to help lead the team in that respect," Davis said. "Being the only men's non-scholarship team in the SEC, it's very challenging, and it feels great each time we are able to go out there and beat other teams."

Although both squads turned in impressive mileage and training over the summer months, the runners are eager to return to racing against fellow SEC and non-conference competition. In the same respect, the opener will also allow the squads to see how the new runners gel alongside the veterans this season.

"It's one thing to race in practice, but in a meet it's good to develop a tolerance level," Davis said. "Also, it's a good opportunity to see where our summer training has brought us, and what our new guys are like — I'm especially excited to see the future of the program."

Both the men's and women's squads are hoping that a solid showing early in the season will propel them further ahead when they face challenging SEC competition later this fall. With leadership and impressive team dynamics, both teams aim to gain some respect in the formidable conference.

"Last year, we went out there and knocked on the door of a couple of teams that had never expected us before," Davis said. "This year, we want to climb our way up in the SEC and beat some teams we aren't supposed to beat." ■

Vanderbilt quarterback Larry Smith (10) will be charged with running Vanderbilt's new no-huddle offense in his second career start on Saturday against Western Carolina. The offense hopes to drastically improve from a year ago when it ranked among the worst in the country in passing and in overall yardage.

friday conversation with MOLLY KINSELLA

Interview by DAVID SHOCHAT
Asst Sports Editor

Vanderbilt Hustler: What's the hardest thing about playing soccer at Vanderbilt, other than time management?

Molly Kinsella: Definitely the time commitment of the sport, like the practicing every day and having to lift at 6:30 in the morning. Stuff like that.

VH: Most underrated player on the team?
MK: Megan Forester

VH: Best moment as a Vandy soccer player so far?

VH: If you weren't at Vandy, where would you have gone and what put Vandy over the top?

MK: I was leaning towards Ole Miss or Memphis, and they were both close to home. I came to Vanderbilt because of the academic part and Ronnie (Coach Woodard) was my coach for ODP (Olympic Development Program), so I really liked her.

VH: Most enjoyable class and/or professor you have had at Vanderbilt?

MK: Anthropology with (Professor) Rosemarie Mincey

VH: David Beckham or Landon Donovan?

MK: David Beckham

VH: Does the team have fun going on road trips or is it strictly business?

MK: No, I would say it is definitely fun. We have a lot of fun on the buses and go to movies and stuff.

VH: You have some tough games coming up against Oklahoma, Missouri and Texas Tech before you enter Southeastern Conference play. How important is it to play some teams like that before you get to the SEC?

MK: It is important to set a standard because right now the teams that we are playing in preseason are also playing other SEC teams and people are comparing scores, and also, it gives us a little leeway with working on certain formations and people on the field.

VH: Is there a team in the SEC other than Vanderbilt that we should watch out for this season? Maybe a team you are looking forward to playing?

MK: Florida, as always. I think everyone is looking forward to playing Florida because we were beating them three different times last year and they beat us in overtime and they are ranked No. 9 in the country.

VH: How tired are you and your sister of getting asked about one another?

MK: (Laughs) It comes up in every single interview. I mean, it doesn't get old. It is just kind of funny now. Everyone knows we have played together forever now, and they always want the same answer.

Hard work paying off for Vanderbilt

Kate Goldin scored the first goal of her career last weekend. She and the Commodores are off to a 3-0 start but face Big 12 power Oklahoma this weekend after taking on neighboring Belmont.

It's always nice when effort is rewarded, especially for the Vanderbilt women's soccer team. The Commodores' hard work this offseason has already paid dividends in their first games of the season.

"We've been working very hard in the preseason," said senior Megan Forester following Vanderbilt's second victory of the season over Mercer. "We came in changing a lot of things, and obviously it's paying off."

For the Commodores (3-0) to be successful in the upcoming slate, they must continue to reap the benefits of their preseason efforts.

On Friday night, the squad of neighboring Belmont will visit the VU Soccer Complex. The Bruins cross 21st Avenue on the heels of a 2-1 victory at home, against Tennessee-Martin. Belmont has notched two wins and a lone defeat, at the University of Alabama-Birmingham.

With less than 48 hours rest, Vanderbilt subsequently hosts Oklahoma. Among the leaders of the Big-12, the Sooners, led by Whitney Palmer, enter Sunday afternoon's match with a perfect 4-0 record. Palmer, a junior, was named the Big 12 Offensive Player of the Week after scoring all three Oklahoma goals in a 3-1 defeat of Tulsa last Sunday, in Norman.

While the Sooners have certainly assembled an admirable resume in August, Vanderbilt's has been just as impressive.

In the season opener on Aug. 22, the Commodores edged off St. Louis University, with a final tally of 2-1. Junior Megan Kinsella provided the contest's opening goal early in the second-half. Later, at the 75-minute mark, freshman Amanda Essay recorded the game-winning score for the Commodores. Though the Billikens added a goal with around 10 minutes to play in regulation, it was not enough to stay with the hosting Commodores.

Six days later, Vanderbilt increased its mark to 2-0, by virtue of a 2-0 triumph over visiting Mercer. Not to be outdone by sister Megan, Molly Kinsella put the Commodores on the board less than two minutes into the second-half. And, to cement the victory, Forester connected with the Billikens' net near the end of regulation.

Last Sunday, the Commodores would continue their winning ways, disposing of Murray State 4-0. Despite the absence of head coach Ronnie Woodard, who gave birth to her first child one day prior, Vanderbilt did not miss a beat. Megan Kinsella paced the Commodores, with her second goal of the season, at roughly 18 minutes into the opening period. Vanderbilt never looked back, as freshmen Madeline Danna, Chelsea Stewart and redshirt freshman Kate Goldin all earned the first goals of their respective college careers.

"Getting the results is always great," Forester said.

The date with Oklahoma signifies the end of a five-game home stand to open the 2009 campaign. After a five-day break, Woodard's unit travels to Auburn, Alabama on Sept. 11, for clashes with Texas Tech and Missouri in the Auburn Classic. ■
